Chapter 5: Writing to Persuade

Provides facts to support arguments about ants.

Demonstrates the power of writing and having sound reasons or arguments in order to persuade.

An example of a voice change from third person to first person to offer a point of view.

Can be used to introduce written response from the point of view of a character or the student as a persuasive argument developed from a pro/con chart.

Can be used to help students develop arguments. They can take on the persona of a character and develop pro/con arguments to argue their case.

Can be used to help students develop arguments. They can take on the persona of a character and develop pro/con arguments to argue their case.

Provides facts to support arguments about ants.

A good example of the importance of forming your arguments based on what you know about your audience.